Vol. xxxvu. 13 When first examining this site, the impression left was that it was merely a plundered cairn.¹ Writing now with more knowledge of the Fig. 1. The Camp, Montgoldnim. varieties of Stone Circles in these parts of Scotland, I incline to agree ¹ See Proceedings, vol. xxxiv. p. 107. with what Mr Linton suggested, namely, that the structure was originally a Stone Circle. This is borne out by the following facts. In Aberdeenshire we find, at Whitehill, Monymusk, just such a rampart of stones concentric with the outer standing stones (here absent); and from its Fig. 2. Cairn at MontgoMrum. position on the S.W. arc the great diorite block, now ruined, might well have been the Recumbent Stone. The compass-mark on my ground-plan shows the N.E. as well as the north....
