Excerpt: . he had got very far when he had led Eva to quote poetry, and on that hint he spake. It was in vain. Beyond Cowper, the evangelical poet, she knew nothing, and would know nothing; and such was the tranquil purity of her mind, such was the sober certainty of waking bliss with which she seemed to fill the narrow sphere of her enjoyment, that Charles felt it almost a crime to try to familiarise her with works of imagination and passion, to communicate to her the sweet madness with which she had inspired him. At times he felt it was like the attempt of Milton's Satan to introduce into the pure region of heaven strange fire, his own invented torment. Still he urged her to read poetry, for he felt as if it might plead for him, --as if its impassioned language...
