I refer to good roads and highway transportation. Highway transportation is already here, but, with the exception of a small percentage, our roads are not adequate to efficient haulage over them. To make this form of transportation efficient and economical we must have a solid road bed - heavy enough and firm enough to allow for speed and tonnage. You cannot have these if you are operating in mud. Mud retards progress, your operating costs increase and hence you are not able to give your patrons transportation at a figure which could be called economical, nor can you expect to receive from your operation the profit which would come to you if the operation was on a solid base. Therefore, under these conditions you would not be doing much in the way of lowering food costs to the consumer. The consumer, as well as the producer (the farmer) should be as much interested in better roads as the operator who uses them for economy in this line will affect all. It has always been the practice to develop up to the existing demand. You would not build or make anything for which a demand did not exist. Taking the railroads as an example -...
