Not illustrated. 1851 Excerpt: .the very eye of sea storms and land storms, of mountain winds and water winds. It is of all colours, but a misty yellow predominates. As we walked along we could not but look up continually, and the mass above being on every side so huge, it appeared more wonderful than when we saw the whole together. We sat down on one of the large stones which lie scattered near the base of the rock, with sea-weed growing amongst them. Above our heads the rock was perpendicular for a considerable height, nay, as it seemed, to the very top; and on the brink of the precipice a few sheep (two of them rams with twisted horns) stood as if on the look-out over the wide country. The road to a considerable height is through a narrow cleft in which a flight of steps is hewn; the steps nearly fill it, and on each side the rocks form a high and irregular wall: it is almost like a long sloping cavern, only that it is roofed by the sky instead of stone. We came to the barracks; soldiers wives were hanging out linen upon the rails, while the wind was beating about them furiously; there was nothing which it could set in motion but the garments of the women and the linen on the rails. The grass (for we had now come to green grass) was close and smooth, and not one blade an inch above another,...
